Volume 12, Issue 1, Spring 2008

Message from Barbara Strauss NOTSL Chair

Although technical services staff may believe that they work behind the scenes, the result of their labor is experienced by library users on the Web. Explore how the work that you do provides a Library 2.0 experience for your users. Join Mindy Pozenel (OCLC) and Kathy Hughes (State Library of Ohio) to talk about how local bibliographic data is exposed in the WorldCat.org and WorldCat Local environment.

Learn how patrons access all the old and new bibliographic services that WorldCat.org offers and explore how the role of technical services staff supports discovery and resource sharing. While this may seem obvious after using OCLC for years, it is not quite so obvious how new services take advantage of the work that library staff do.

Beyond the exploration of WorldCat features and exposure to WorldCat Local, we will cover topics such as, the importance of having all bibliographic records in WorldCat, bibliographic reclamation, why it is important in the resource sharing context to have holdings information and lending policies accurate, what is essential and non-essential.
